A VAST CONGLOMERATION Coyote Hills Chemical Combinations,

ASHLAND, Or., Jan. 17 .- F. D. Swingle, one of the leading cattlemen of Lake and Klamath counties, Or., who makes his home in Ashland, speaking of the Coyote Hills country, near Warner lake, in Lake county, says that the scope of country contains more different chemical combinations of soil and water, and larger quantities of various minerals than any other spot in North America. The whole county has the appearance of being a volcanic upheaval of the ocean bottom in bygone days. One of the many oddities in the chemical line in the country is Alkali lake, situated in the summersun-blistered country west of Juniper mountain and thirty miles due north of the Lakeview mines, in the Coyote Hills mining district. This lake is a natural artesian well of huge proportions. It consists of a perpendicular hole in the earth about forty feet in diameter and of unknown depth, out of which continuously flows a large stream of coal water, clear as crystal, which MAL MAKES RENTED, REPAIRED, exchanged, sold.
